PREFACE	xiv
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.....	xvii
CURRICULUM VITAE.....	xviii
INTRODUCTION.....	1
i. A lifelong concern with real possibility	2
ii. Pre-critical dogmatism and the invention of primary forces	5
iii. Kant's critical approach to coexistence and systematic unity.....	9
iv. The structure and aims of this study.....	11
CHAPTER ONE. THE CAUSE OF MOTION IS VIS ACTIVA NOT VIS MO-
TRIX : KANT'S FIRST SOLUTION TO THE MIND/BODY PROBLEM.....	24
1.1 Kant with—and against—the philosophical tradition	25
1.1.1 Traditional questions about change and action.....	26
1.1.2 A traditional doctrine: Kant's monadism	27

1.1.3 A traditional methodology: metaphysics and the principles of mechanics	27
1.1.4 An untraditional twist	28
1.2 Kant's criticism of post-Leibnizian rationalist mechanics (Living Forces , part I, §§1-3)	29
1.2.1 Kant's understanding of the vis motrix view (Living Forces , part I, §1).....	32
1.2.2 Kant's first criticism: the vis motrix view cannot explain the cause of motion (Living Forces , part I, §2)	37
1.2.3 Kant's second criticism: the vis motrix view is metaphysically incoherent (Living Forces , part I, §3)	40
1.2.4 A summary of Kant's argument	46
1.2.5 Physical influx and a new conception of change	48
1.3 A problem and a solution: Kant's metaphysical principle of succession.....	51
1.3.1 Physical influx for bodies, pre-established harmony for monads?.....	52
1.3.2 Kant's answer.....	55

1.4 The “general concept of active force” and the real possibility of temporal order (Living Forces , part I, §4).....	56
1.4.1 Change is not just change in motion: Kant’s general account of change.....	57
1.4.2 Four principles of monadic change	61
1.4.3 The argument of §4.....	62
1.4.4 The “ nach und nach ” thesis: time and the deferment of vis activa	65
1.4.5 A speculative defense of the nach und nach thesis	69
1.4.6 From the nach und nach thesis to motion—and a host of problems	72
1.5 First application of Kant’s account of vis activa : All substances in our world are in space (Living Forces , part I, §§7-8).....	77
1.5.1 Kant’s definition of a world	78
1.5.2 The varieties of worlds	78
1.5.3 The argument of §4 extended	81
1.6 Second application of Kant’s account of vis activa : Kant’s first solution to the mind/body problem (Living Forces , part I, §§5-6)	84

1.6.1 Kant's understanding of the mind/body problem	86
1.6.2 The difficulties with matter acting on mind.....	88
1.6.3 The difficulties with mind acting on matter.....	90
1.6.4 Kant's solution.....	91
1.6.5 More problems: hylozoism, dogmatism, an unproven dualism.....	94
CHAPTER TWO. EMBODIED COGNITION AND ELEMENTS OF KANT'S
METAPHYSICS OF THE 1750s	96
2.1 Cosmology and the schema of our world	96
2.1.1 Bodily action is involved in every mental change	97
2.1.2 The divine schema of our world	98
2.2 Knowledge and the body in Universal Natural History , Third Part (1:173-
200)	100
2.2.1 The unequal distribution of matter in our solar system.....	103
2.2.2 The effect of this on our ability to think.....	104

2.2.3 The constitution thesis: the “forces of the soul” are “hemmed in and impeded by the obstacles of a crude matter to which they are most intimately bound”	107
2.3 The metaphysical underpinnings of Kant’s account of embodied cognition.....	112
2.3.1 The principle of succession	114
2.3.2 The principle of coexistence.....	120
2.3.3 Substances’ dependence on God	124
2.3.4 Continuities with the critical philosophy	128
2.3.5 The principle of succession and Kant’s embodied epistemology	129
2.4 Trouble brewing—locating the soul	131
2.4.1 Physical monads	133
2.4.2 A fatal flaw.....	134
2.4.3 Spatial presence without repulsion.....	137
2.4.4 The location of the soul with respect to the body	140

CHAPTER THREE. DREAMS OF THE CRITICAL PHILOSOPHY	144
3.1 Interpreting Dreams	145
3.1.1 Kant's most poetical work.....	146
3.1.2 Vaihinger and Palmquist: Kant the Swedenborgian	149
3.1.3 Cassirer and Fischer: Kant as a Humean skeptic	150
3.1.4 de Vleeschauwer and Beck: a proto-critical Kant	151
3.1.5 Shell and Butts: the decisive influence of Rousseau or of Leibniz	152
3.1.6 Laywine: Deep reflections on cognitive faculties	153
3.1.7 My approach to interpreting the text.....	154
3.1.8 A daunting construction.....	156
3.2 The real possibility of spirit beings	157
3.2.1 Logical possibility is not enough.....	157
3.2.2 A fire in Stockholm	160
3.2.3 The location of souls revisited.....	162
3.2.4 A newfound skepticism.....	165

3.3 The unthinkability of spirit-beings	169
3.3.1 We have no understanding of primary forces.....	171
3.3.2 A distinction: knowing something is real/knowing something's real possibility	174
3.3.3 Recognizing a force without understanding it.....	176
3.3.4 Skeptical conclusions.....	178
3.4 Speculations on materialism	180
3.4.1 The soul is not material	182
3.4.2 Reflections on metaphysical dualism	183
3.4.3 An unfathomable mystery.....	184
CHAPTER FOUR. A NEW VISION OF THE MIND/BODY PROBLEM: THE INNER SENSE THESIS.....	189
4.1 The wreckage of Kant's early metaphysics	191
4.1.1 The prospects for metaphysics in 1766.....	192

4.1.2 The first problem: an inconsistency in Kant's rational psychology.....	194
4.1.3 The second problem: an inability to distinguish simple souls and physical monads.....	195
4.1.4 A solution not taken.....	196
4.2 Rational cosmology in the Metaphysik L₁	197
4.2.1 The unity of the world.....	197
4.2.2 Our world is the only actual world	199
4.3 Embodied cognition in Metaphysik L₁	200
4.3.1 Overview: the connection between body and soul	201
4.3.2 Three theses from the Empirical Psychology	202
4.3.3 The community thesis	204
4.3.4 The constitution thesis.....	208
4.3.5 The embodiment thesis.....	212
4.4 A new understanding of the mind/body problem	216
4.4.1 A key insight: the soul is an object of inner sense.....	218

4.4.2 First application of the inner sense thesis: a solution to the impenetrability problem.....	221
4.4.3 Second application of the inner sense thesis: a proof of metaphysical dualism	224
4.4.4 Third application of the inner sense thesis: a new understanding of the mind/body problem	229
4.4.5 Fourth application of the inner sense thesis: the presence of the soul in space	232
4.4.6 The mind/body problem in the mid-1770s	234
AFTERWORD: THREE DIRECTIONS FOR FUTURE RESEARCH	239
APPENDIX: TRANSLATION OF THOUGHTS ON THE TRUE ESTIMATION OF LIVING FORCES	241
